1. On 14 September 1951 the Chinese Communist Central Authority instructed the regional politburos to encourage promotion of a greater number of labor cadres.
2. These instructions stated that 51,265 industrial worker cadres were promoted between April 1950 and July 1951. Over 26,000 of these were in Manchuria. In position they ranged from factory managers to technicians and cadres of administrative organizations. During the next three years a total of 130,000 cadres must be promoted from among industrial workers.
3. The instructions stated that if the political and intellectual level of the workers is too low to justify promotion they must be given training in Communism and extension schools must be established.
